They did this by making the car so cheap that it didn't need to be particularly safe or reliable to have the best value. Not only that, but it is showing up on almost every list of the best car brands. Most surveys show that Asian companies have been dominating the automotive market for several years now. Much of their success can be traced back to the late 1940s. This gave them an unexpected advantage. Because they were not producing cars as quickly, they were making fewer mistakes. This gave Japanese cars a reputation for reliability. Additional experiments and innovations in manufacturing allowed them to advance beyond their competitors. People now need cars that are cheaper and last longer, which is what Japanese companies, and now Kia, pride themselves on.
