This is a question that travels a lot of people when it comes to writing holiday greetings. You have Hanukkah, Hanukah, Hanukah, and dozens of other spelling, but it turns out there is no right answer. All the different spelling you see technically count as correct. This is because of something called transliteration, which is "the process of transferring a word from the alphabet of one language to another", according to Dictionary.com. The name of the eight-day Hebrew holiday originates in the Hebrew language, where it is written as כּוּכָהּ. When you translate it into the English alphabet, however, it does not there is an exact spelling equivalent. Hanukkah is the most popular spelling. If you use Hanukkah, you're definitely in the majority. It is the most common spelling nowadays, perhaps because of the fact that it looks exactly like it sounds in English. The term has more than 26.7 million hits on Google à way more than the other variations combined à and is the primary spelling used by Merriam-Webster. But Chanukah is more traditional. This might stumble English readers thinking that the "ch" at the beginning is pronounced as "Charlie." It is actually pronounced as the end of "Bach", as the Jewish organization Chabad puts it. English doesn't have a letter that sounds like that, so let's go with an "H" instead. Although Chanukah comes in second place on Google today (with over 6.3 million hits), it was once the most popular. According to NPR, Chanukah was the go-to spelling back in 2005, when it had the most research hits compared to the other variations. This content is imported from {embed-name}. Then there's Hanukkah, which is extremely similar to the first (and most popular) spelling. Searching Google for Hanukkah automatically provides results for Hanukkah instead, but you can easily surpass it à the original results only provide 2.3 million results. Any other spelling variation you might think of even less hits. It's safe to say that you're not gonna be wrong with Hanukkah or Chanukah, but in both cases, transliteration doesn't change the definition. definition. Everyone refers to the Jewish festival of the lights and the word itself means "dedication". You can celebrate Hanukkah this year between December 2 and December 10 with lots of latkes, chocolate gelts and sufanivot (a.k.a. jelly donuts). There are five spell kits to choose from: the north wind, open window, Hauswarming, CO Haibitata and dream Haus. Since I have no problems with my companions of room ... .. we were together for three years now ... and our leasing is not awake until the summer, he would reign up to the north wind (designed To protect your home from the negative energy) and open window (a sort of spring cleanliness for the way you feel in your home). I ended up choosing the spell of the north wind, which is said to "blow away the malignant spirits, strange vibrations, and Heebie Jeebies", all protecting your space, because the first floor of my building was a hospital of the dolls. Nothing scary has never happened in the apartment, but you can never be too safe. No one wants a situation of Annabelle, after all. I was about to execute the spell alone, but then I asked my roommates if they wanted to help, and they were 100 percent in it. We canceled the kitchen table and opened the box-shaped box. Inside they are all the ingredients you need, in addition to a meditation card with instructions for how to launch the spell. We started by turning the candle and incense on a plate. (Spoiler: he smelled like a sandal, filling the room with a woody and extraordinary fragrance.) Subsequently, we put the crystal inside the small cauldron and we turned the salt over it until the small bottle was empty. After this we held his hands, closed his eyes and focused on the part of the meditation of the spell. Was! We left the candle and incense burning for a while longer, but after exploding the flame, the only thing to do was sprinkle around the apartment and outside the door. It was so easy. The courtesy Hauswitch so, what happened after? Much, and even nothing. Before leaving, my roommates have decided that the spell would have even emptied the negative vibration apartment of the former I could not disagree - the spell presumably cancels negativity, right? Á, à, ~ "and I was interested in seeing what the results would influence. That night, I dreamed that I was attending my new crush à € € It was fantastic. It was a nice dream that I actually couldn't go back to sleeping morning. I had to get up and go to the gym to burn part of my new energy. A few days later, one of my roommates has a text from his ex, but it wasn't it was in the apartment when he sent a message. A bit 'weird, right? Another strange thing that 'happened and' I have six bites of mosquitoes during two nights. Then, a few days later, the exterminator will is presented without notice and sprayed the apartment for bugs. He always shows up unannounced, but what are the odds' that he came the same week that I was brutally attacked by a monster that buried me in my sleep? I like to think that was not a coincidence, but rather the north wind blowing helps me. I think we should wait a little 'to see what else happens in our apartment. aggiornera2 this story if something interesting is falling apart. List of partners (vendor) The Spaniard has two main ways to make suggestions or commands to a group that includes the person speaking. Both can be used as an equivalent of "we" in English a phrase like "leave." The easiest way is to use the imperative mood plural first-person, which takes the same shape as the plural form of first person injunctive mood. In regular -ar verbs, the ending is replaced by -emos, and -er and -ir verbs, the ending is replaced by -amos. Bailemos un vals. We dance a waltz. Compremos a house en España ± a. We buy a house in Spain. Hagamos a trato. Let's make a deal. Tratemos de ser felices. Let's be happy. If you're using the imperative form of a reflexive verb, the final -emos becomes -a © monos, and the final -amos become -Ájmonos. In other words, the -nos ending is added to the verb, but the -s fell before the pronoun: Levanta © monos a las seis de la maÁ ± ana. We climb to 6 lava las manos © monos. We wash your hands. RiÁjmonos a ratito. We laugh a bit '. (RÁ © irse it is an irregular verb.) In the negative form, however, the pronoun comes before the verb: Nos mejoremos. Not improve ourselves. Probably the most common imperative mood, and even easier to learn, is to use the plural form of first person followed by a ir, ie a", followed by the infinite: Vamos a nadar. Let's go swimming. Vamos a casarnos. Let's get married. Vamos to estudiar. Vamos a viajar in Italy. Let's go to Italy. It can be noted that "we are at + infinite" can also mean "we are we are we area + infinity." So the first sample sentence above could also mean "we harm ". Indeed, "IR A + Infinitive "is a very common substitute for the future tense in Spanish. In the first plural person, then, the context will determine what is meant. It is not uncommon when the meaning "we go" to replace "Vamos A" with simply "a". For example, "a ver" is a very common way of saying "Let's see". When translation from English, do not confuse "Let's" as a suggestion to the group with "Let's" as a way to ask for permission. For example, a way you could say "¡Ayudaci!" would be "Permátenos Ayudarle!", where the permeir of the verb is used in the third person (the person who is faced) rather than the first person (people who want to help). "Even" has dozens of possible translations into Spanish. Here is a guide for "even" that will work most of the time. As is the case with other words that have a wide range of meanings, many of them seemingly unrelated to each other, when translated Nng "Even" you must first understand what it means and how it is used.
