Ignorance does not equate with recklessness, disregard, carelessness, although an ignorant person may have a surfeit of those habits. Terms uninformed ("not informed; ignorant"), inexperienced ("Not experienced; lacking knowledge or experience; green"), and ignorant ("Unknowledgeable or uneducated; characterized by ignorance") perhaps more properly express ignorance of consequences. Another related word is naive ("Lacking worldly experience, wisdom, or judgement; unsophisticated"). One who is naive (a naif) may often not know the range of possible consequences in any given circumstance. Previously-mentioned short-sighted ("figuratively) Unable to see long-term objectives; lacking foresight") is related to ignorance of consequences in that one who is short-sighted is likely to not look into what the consequences of actions may be. This word is more about ability and attitude than about knowledge of what will happen. Closed. This question is off topic. It is not currently accepting answers. Want to improve this question?
