Flags with seals, coats of arms and other multicoloured emblems are ordered only according to their color fields. The color of the text is almost entirely ignored. The colours of the two metals of the European arad (gold and white) are first ordered. The five main colours of the European araldic (black, red, blue, green and purple) are sorted later. Various colors (murrey, tan, gray and pink) are sorted for last. Similar colors are grouped together to make navigation of this practical list. As such, the prevailing greens in the Middle East are ordered along with the brightest greens prevalent in Western Europe. Significantly: the yellows, oranges and oranges are grouped as "gold" due to the lack of distinct divisions within this spectrum and the different standards of interpretation of "gold", which appears in the legally encoded specifications of many flags. Some flags, including some from southern Asia, include both a yellow and a distinct orange; These were noted accordingly.
