This may have been due to your natural paternal instinct to protect me from the darkest elements of a child's imagination. That, or it just didn't feel like sharing their delicious snack with a rugarat who couldn't tell the difference between their expensive old cheddar and Kraft singles. Anyway, he had me dodging most dairy at bedtime for a while and introduced me to the concept of foods that influence sleep and nightmare potential. Now Burger King is doing the same with their new Halloween burger Nightmare King. A perfect appetizer for the late night for the bravest among us. Let's go! What: A new promotion of Halloween burgers from Burger King that claims to give people nightmares. Who: Burger King, David Miami Why do we care: Look, does it really matter if this burger gives you nightmares or not? It is still a fun trick that appeals to people's love for all strange and peculiar things. It's fast food junk talk fuel. Of course people are going to sort this out to find out if it works. And if he doesn't? They're still talking about that green bun. What: Our new Texas friend Sonny Carl is back in another anti-Ted Cruz ad directed by Richard Linklater. Who: Shoot Ted Cruz, Richard Linklater Why we care: After laughing at Ted Cruz's claim to be a Texan last week, Carl is questioning the From Cruz tagging his Democrat Beto O'Rourke an à cè triple Meat Whataburger Liberal who is out of contact with Texas's values. We see images of Cruz professing the love of him by the white, white castle. Carl points out there's not a white castle 900 miles from Texas. (He's not in Canada, either.) What: A new short film from the brand of outdoor accessories Yeti. Who: Yeti, Felt Soul Media Why we care: I've been a fan of Yeti's film work for years, and this last is a bit of a start. Follow the journey of architect Jack Sanders, from his work as a student helping a rural Alabama baseball team to his own community sand team today in Texas. It's a smooth and fascinating story that manages to keep the consistent soul underlying all of the brand's work. What: The final installment to the HP series The Wolf, starring Christian Slater. Who: HP, Giant Spoon Why do we care? After leaving a teaser in August, here's the big 20-minute finale, a showdown between Slater and Jonathan Banks (Breaking Bad, Better Call Saul). Since it began in 2017, the Wolf series has always been a unique content movement for a brand like HP, and the quality and commitment to telling a good story is evident in its production and casting. A good shipment. What: A new doc from the MillerCoors brand that actually has little to no branding. Pilsner Urquell, Doug Tirola Why we care: To celebrate the 175th anniversary of the brand, Pilsner Urquell decided to invest in a film that not only has its logo on it, but also has many of its competitors. The film follows a New York attorney pursuing his dream of becoming a Milwaukee-based brewer and professional beer educator as he tries to become a Cicerone master. The film, directed by Doug Tirola, was well received at SXSW and is opening today at NYC's Cinema Village, running there next week. It will be interesting to see how the brand uses the film, and their decision to make a real film instead of a feature film ad, to their advantage in the months. months. months.
