It collects and maintains about half of the blood supply of the United States by about 4 million donors [ref.] in 2001, this amounted to over 7 million blood units. Americans require about 39,000 blood units every day due to accidents, surgery, illness or disease [ref.] blood is oato by all the nation's hospitals and the United States Army. the blood collected from the red cross is accurately labeled and shipped in two different places: a component lab and a test lab. the test lab puts blood through nine tests to make sure it is safe and free of transmitted diseases. the component laboratory separates blood into red blood cells, platelets and plasma. Once the test results are received, the components are shipped to hospitals as needed. disaster reliefdisaster relief is another important aspect of the red cross. Although the main responsibility to address disasters is with local, state and federal governments, in the immediate aftermath of a disaster, the needs of victims can easily overwhelm the capacities of government officials. the red cross strives to respond to any disaster or emergency incident within two hours of notification, although this is not always possible due to dangerous conditions, when the red cross arrives on the scene of aThe first priority is to provide food, water, refuge and medical services. Medical services include first aid and treatment for some current conditions. For example, someone who needs dialysis or diabetes drugs can get help from the Red Red Cross A disaster. The Red Cross also provides mental health advice to disaster victims, volunteers and rescuers. Mental health care is vital because anyone involved in a disaster sees and experiences things beyond their normal lives, and it can be very difficult to manage these experiences. The Red Cross has specially trained personnel with experience in counseling disasters. Cross-services also have jobs to help people resume their lives in the wake of a disaster, giving them the tools to support them. This may include referral, transport or professional tools. Finally, in situations where insurance and government assistance is not enough, the red cross can offer long-term help for reconstruction. All these services are in addition to the logistics of accommodation, food and coordination of rescuers, medical personnel and victims. Using bulletin boards, Internet sites and other communication tools, the Red Cross also seeks to gather separate families in the midst of a disaster. When there is an important disaster somewhere else in the world, such as the 2004 tsunami, American red Cross sends people and supplies to integrate the efforts of the other red cross and red crescent groups and works to coordinate relief from other national groups .ID to soldiers and victims of Warin's wartime, the Red Cross makes up the original goal of the Red International Cross Movement - provide help and comfort to soldiers and victims of war. This often takes the form of distributing assistance packages and keeping members of the armed forces in contact with family members. Community Education and raise awareness of the red cross Impacts communities in the United States with its health and safety education programs. Through babysitting training, lifeguard training, CPR training and HIV/AIDS certification and education, they give people the tools to become savers themselves. In addition, the Red Cross offers training at the workplace in a variety of health and safety areas. The chapters of the Red Cross offer a wide range of humanitarian services, including food pans, elderly services, community service programs, homeless shelters and youth groups.
