PDF VersionCDC-PDF (17 KB) Rational Statement for the Washington Group General Measure on disability as the umbrella term refers to problems such as compromise, limitation of activities or restrictions of participation indicating the negative aspects of operation. While it is important to collect information on all aspects of the disability process, it is not possible to do so in censuses or surveys not dedicated to disability. However, important information on the selected aspects of disability can be obtained from censuses. In their ongoing deliberations, the Washington Group (WG) has agreed that disability measurement is associated with a variety of purposes that relate to different disability dimensions or different conceptual components of disability models. A fundamental agreement of the WG was the need for a clear link between the purpose of the measurement and the operation of disability indicators. Equalization of opportunities has been agreed and selected as a goal for the development of a comparable overall disability measure at international level. This purpose has been chosen because ©: was relevant (of great importance between countries in relation to policy), and it was possible (it is possible to collect the proposed information using a comparable general invalidity measure that includes a small set of 6-questions similar to 6-censorship). To address this goal, we begin by identifying the people who are at greatest risk of the general population to experience restrictions in the performance of tasks (such as daily life activities) or to participate in roles (such as work). Measurements to identify this population of risk are the most elementary of the spectrum .ni .ni inoizatilil noc enosrep ebberednerpmoc oppurg li .“ihcsir oppurg otseuQ ,Jazneidu ,eredev ,erעדrocir ,eranimmac emoc ilianoizunif Átívvitta “Áoic(Átívvitta Activities that may or may not be restricted in more complex activities and/or participation restrictions depending on whether or not they use assistive devices, have a favourable environment or have abundant resources. Based on these decisions, the Washington Group has developed this set of questions to be used in national censuses to gather information on the limitations of basic activities that work among national populations. The purpose of the questions is to provide internationally comparable data for populations living in very different cultures with different economic resources. The aim was to identify people with similar types and levels of limitations in their basic activity, regardless of nationality or culture. It was not our goal to identify every person with a disability within every community. We recognize that this may not meet all the needs for disability statistics, nor replicate an assessed population in a wider range of sectors than would be possible in other forms of data collection or administrative data. The census format requires that a limited number of questions be allocated to each statistic to be produced. For reasons of simplicity, brevity and comparability, it has been decided to identify the limits in the basic sectors of activity that work at a universal level, are most closely associated with social exclusion and are most frequent. It is expected that the information resulting from the use of these questions will represent the majority, but not all, of people with limitations in their core business operating in a country. They represent the most common limitations in the core business operating within any country. Capture people with similar problems in all countries. The proposed questions identify the population with that have the potential to limit independent participation to the company. The planned use of these data compare levels of participation in employment, education or family life for those with disabilities compared to those without disabilities to see if people with disabilities have reached social inclusion. In addition, the data could be used to monitor prevalence trends for people with limitations in particular core activity domains. It would not represent the total population with limitations nor © It would necessarily represent the population with disabilities that would require the measurement of limitation in all domains and that would require a much wider set of questions.
