Marantz sr4002 standby light flashing.

Hi, my Marantz NR1501 amplifier stopped working. Playing music at a medium-high volume (60) for 3-4 hours. Now it simply has a flashing standby light (about 2 times per second) when I turn on the power supply. In the manual it is said to disconnect all the speakers etc. To see if the cause is a jumped speaker or a short circuit. All speakers are disconnected & € "with only the connected power supply and is always the same. Have anyone ever done someone? Should Marantz be able to repair it? Thanks. It has clearly developed a defect. Return it to your retailer for repair. I did some research and faults of the detection circuit continue to appear for this type of description. As Dave says, let's go back to the drug dealer. However, I don't think that necessarily be where you brought it from, until I am an authorized retailer who could help them ... If their closer to you. Not too safe if obliged us, but if your machines under warranty, ask for a solitary machine for the moment. I experienced this same problem when I owned the 1501 and no matter what I did anything To get it out of the protection mode so out it went to Richersounds again. I had a thread about this potentially happening and didn't go down well I was Fucking terrorist. I read for the first time that this is happening at sr6004's on forums avforum but I did not think it would be a problem with 1501's. It's definitely a mistake, and you'd be trying to send him back or even look for a fix, luckily, I got my money back. Hi, my Marantz NR1501 amp has stopped working. He played music at a moderate-high volume (60) for three to four hours. Now he just has a flashing standby light (about twice a second) when I turn on the power. The manual says to disconnect all loudspeakers etc to see if it is a blown loudspeaker or a short loudspeaker that is the cause. All loudspeakers are disconnected with only the power on and is still the same. Has anyone ever tried it before? Should Marantz be able to fix it? Thanks! Have you tried letting him off the grid for several minutes? If you do not remove the mains plug from the return speakers, reconnect power. On my 6004 the master reset is obtained by pressing the round mode and the clear buttons together. If this dose continues to work, it would appear that the overheated protection was not fast enough to prevent any kind of damage and repair is necessary. The problem documented in the USA was with the older 6004 serial models, and it was connected with high levels of hddi on the entrances I think they caused a pop and then a protection. I think it was this supposed connection, that the issue of the alarm has emerged. I've been playing my 6004 daily since I bought the last feeb at a 11 levels, including ref movie levels without any problems, so I think with all things in life it's drawing luck. "With so many colors, why stick to black and white" Have you tried letting him off the grid for several minutes? If you do not remove the network from the return speakers, reconnect the power. On my 6004 the Master reset is obtained by pressing the surround mode and clear clear buttons If this dose continues to work, it would appear that the overheated protection was not fast enough to prevent some kind of damage and repair is needed. The problem documented in the USA was with the older 6004 serial models, and it was connected with high levels of hddi on the inputs I think they caused a pop and then a protection. I think it was of this supposed connection, that the issue of scaremongering emerged. I've played my 6004 daily since I bought it the last feeb at all levels, including ref movie levels without problems, so I think with all the things in life it's luck of drawing. This is exactly what happened to my was a pop first then the flashing red light and no matter what I did didn't help, detaching leaving the replugging didn't make any difference. I think it's the luck of the draw. I found AVforum and this wire while trying to fix this issue and I almost decided to send my receiver to Marantz for repairs. Before inserting my NR1501 into its box I decided to press and hold all the buttons on my face down simultaneously (except for the power button and the arrows surrounding the input button) after a few seconds after the blinking stopped, I removed my fingers from the buttons and pressed the power button, without-and pretty sure it worked. For good measure I will also notice that before this solution I left the power cord unplugged during the night, when I plugged it back in I still had the arrow. Also, before pressing all the buttons on my face, I changed the outlet I was using. I know this thread is a bit dated, but I found it through a Google search that has this problem at and I thought I'd post what worked for me if someone else stumbles on this thread like I did. Good luck. I had the same problem. flashing light. In the end I did the magic pressure and held all the face buttons, and the unit is turned on. FIG! The problem is I can't find the projector and no sound for the speakers. Is there a reset button somewhere to provide the output again? You. You. From the system's error, on an NR1501, pressing the [MENU] + [ENTER] buttons at the same time. Dirty flurry, thank you for your post. Surprisingly, holding down the 9 buttons of the face slamming the unit from his astonishment and returns to work! You saved me hours of frustration and lots of $$$$. This is really the solution to this problem. How did you understand? THANK YOU!!!!!! Thanks dirty flurry or hello, my My Marantz NR1501 amplifier stopped working. He was playing music at a moderate-high volume (60) for 3-4 hours. Now simply has a flashing standby light (about 2 times per second) when I turn on the ignition. In the manual he says to disconnect all the speakers etc. To see if it is a blown diffuser or a short circuit speaker that is the cause. All speakers are disconnected - with only the attached power supply and is always the same. Does anyone try it before? Should Marantz be able to repair it? Thanks. Hi, ok, I have two of these receivers at home and both developed this same problem with the flashing red swing light. I simply pressed the "menu" and "enter" the buttons at the same time. The light has then passed in solid red and then simply the way the power button and the unit worked perfectly. Please be careful, the cause of this occurrence is leaving this unit for a prolonged period of time. You must remember to deactivate this unit as soon as you did it using it. I came across the same thing with my AV Marantz SR6004 receiver, ie the slow red light flashing (2x per second) after shortening the system that connects my speakers ... most of the information I ran before this it concerned the flashing red light very fast and the need to reset everything by keeping the surround, light and output buttons for seven seconds or by pressing all the buttons of the buttons Né the attempt worked. The simple makeup of the pressing menu and enter me a trip and the cost of repairing my unit. Thanks to you vincent !! I have an SR4003 who developed the same problem. Pressing and holding the LL The clear and output buttons for seven seconds worked for me. Thank you Bido2! The flashing light is an indication that your receivers have entered protection mode. This can be caused by a multitude of things, including the shorts of the speaker cables and either with the overheating of the receiver causing pressing the receiver too hard or trying to drive hard to drive the speakers. If you take it, you shouldn't just look at how to reintegrate the receiver, but you should also look at what caused the receiver to go into protection mode to get started. If this is not ordered, the same thing will continue to happen. Thank you for your reply Dante01. In this case, I believe the shielding mode was caused by overheating. My 12-year-old tried to maximize his playing time before school started. It could also have been left with the closet doors closed / poor ventilation. My admonitions about the care of electronics sometimes fall from deaf ears. Fortunately for you that the receiver did have full protection circuitry. I found Avforums and this thread trying to fix this issue and I almost decided to send my receiver to Marantz for repairs. Before packing my NR1501 into its box I decided to hold down all the buttons on my face (with the exception of the power button and the arrows surrounding the ENTER button) after a few seconds the flashing stopped, I removed my fingers from the buttons and pressed the power button - and pretty sure it worked . For good measure also noticed that before this solution I left the power cord disconnected during the night, when I connected it back, I still had the blinking. Also, before pressing all the buttons on my face, I changed the grip I was using. I know this it's a bit dated but I came across a Google search with this problem and thought it can publish what it worked for me in case of anyone else stumbles on this thread like I did. Good luck. DirtyFlurry, your solution by pressing the 8 buttons at once worked worked away, even in May 2019. My Marantz NR1501 is working again ... All you can do is keep in the Menu button by holding down the cursor on the system for 3/5 seconds to restore the flashing light The system will work as brand new way away
