It is owned by AIM Media Indiana. It covers the city of Franklin and several nearby communities in Johnson County, Indiana, including Bargersville, Center Grove, Edinburgh, Greenwood, New Whiteland, Trafalgar and Whiteland. In addition to the daily newspaper, the Daily Journal also produces two weekly newspapers in Johnson County, The Crier serving Camp Atterbury and the Edinburgh Courier in Edinburgh. History Robert N. Brown started the Daily Journal in July 1963 as a sister paper to The Republic in Columbus, Indiana, which his grandfather had started in 1872 and which covered Bartholomew County, which adjoins Johnson County to the south.[2] The newspaper stayed in the family until being purchased by AIM Media in late 2015. The Daily Journal has won several Indiana journalism awards, including the Blue Ribbon Daily award from the Hoosier State Press Association, most recently in 2015.[3] It claims that its 1960s presses on the north side of Franklin were the first cold-type offset printing presses built in the United States.[2] Daily newspapers in Johnson County date back to the 1890s, and when the Daily Journal debuted it joined a newspaper war with The Franklin Evening Star, which had a history dating back to 1861. After six years, the war ended, with the Daily Journal absorbing its afternoon competitor in December 1969.[4] In February 2012, Home News announced that with newspaper printing consolidated at the company's presses in Columbus, the Daily Journal planned to sell its plant on U.S. 31 to KYB Americas, an auto-parts manufacturer, and relocate its newsroom and business offices to the historic Hazelett building in downtown Franklin.[5] Indiana-based Bemis Group, a commercial construction firm, managed the project to renovate the Hazelett building. Today, the space includes a bicycle company, bakery and pharmacy. [6] References ^ Undated, self-reported circulation figures at "About Daily Journal". Daily Journal. In 2005, Cosner was instrumental in launching SOUTH magazine, an upscale lifestyle highlighting the people and cultural touchstones of Johnson County and southern Marion County. Now part of AIM Media, The Daily Journal continues to expand to include exciting new digital platforms. Cosner is a long-time resident of Johnson County, where she lives with her fiancé, Dennis Drake. Cosner has one daughter, Kenna, who is attending classes at Indiana University Bloomington. Cosner herself earned a Bachelor of Science degree from IU. Prior to marketing and advertising, her career path included retail management for Limited Express, where she helped open new stores in Indiana. Cosner currently serves on the Franklin Rotary Club past PR Committee Chair, Franklin Elks past PR Committee Chair, Johnson County Community Foundation Board member and past president of the Indiana Newspaper Advertising Executives Association of the Hoosier State Press Association Foundation. In the past, she has volunteered her time for the Greenwood Chamber of Commerce, the Builder's Association of Greater Indianapolis, the Old Town Greenwood Merchants Association and United Way of Johnson County. In her spare time, Cosner enjoys shopping, baking, home decorating and trips to Florida, where her parents live six months of the year.
